Consolation

(Original.)

"There's escape on the Chittenden door," said Mrs. Cressler. "Chauncey has passed away. Poor Chauncey—has been obliged to endure that woman for so long! It's a wonder he lived as long as he did. Well, I suppose I must go over and offer the usual consolation."

Now, there was not only a want of reason for Mrs. Cressler's going over to offer the "usual consolation," but there was a superfluity of reason why she should not do so. Mrs. Cressler had herself been Mrs. Chittenden and by good rights should have been the widow. But she had tired of Chittenden, sent him off and secured a divorce on the ground of desertion. On the day the divorce was granted she had married Tim Cressler. Chittenden, who had been forced to desert one woman, clung to another and married her. Cressler was still living with Chittenden's first wife, but report said that he was very abusive, the reports emanating from his wife, and if he did not mend his ways he, too, would be forced to desert her. Mrs. Cressler's intention was to offer Mrs. Chittenden that kind of consolation which Satan would give a soul he had purchased—that is, he would thrust it into hell.

"Good morning, Mrs. Chittenden. I have thought, considering what we have both been to poor Chauncey, I would come over and offer my sympathies. Notwithstanding his faults he was too good for most women."

"He was too good for me," said the widow demurely, "but I suppose he wasn't good enough for you, Mrs. Cressler, or he wouldn't have left you."

"I was glad when I saw that you and Chauncey were getting on so well together. There was too great a gap between him and me. Chauncey was not a smart man."

"His first wife was."

"It isn't that I was very smart," said Mrs. Cressler modestly, "but Chauncey was very dull. He needed a wife of very moderate intellect."

"You were fortunate in getting another husband the day you got your divorce from the one that deserted you," said Mrs. Chittenden. "Maybe instead of luck it was smartness."

"I didn't want poor Chauncey to suffer from thinking I'd take him back."

"It was very kind of you not to make him suffer any longer than he did."

"There wasn't any time—if I hadn't been married—that he wouldn't have been glad to return to his sufferings."

"Then it must have been lucky for him that you were married?"

"We'll see about that some day, only in heaven there's no marrying or giving in marriage."

"How is it in the other place? Do you think you're going to have him there?"

"I'm not going there, Mrs. Chittenden, nor is Chauncey. If there's marrying there you'll have to look out for a new husband."

"You'd have both Chauncey and Tim Cressler in heaven, only there's no more bigamy there than marriage."

Mrs. Cressler was not getting ahead in the game. Her thrusts were vigorous, but they were parried with great skill. There was one thing she had come over for that she felt she had gained—a knowledge of what funds Chittenden had left his widow. She had a vague hope that the law might look kindly upon her and consider her a fraction of that widow.

"I hope Chauncey left you comfortable, Mrs. Chittenden," she said in a tone to intimate that she would like to get back to her purpose of offering consolation.

"It's you he's left comfortable," replied the other, "because he was nothing to me. He left me uncomfortable because we were everything to each other."

"They say you made a frugal wife and he left a penny or so in the bank."

"He did, and to his widow."

"There's alimony due me."

"I hope you may get it."

"If it's due the law 'll allow it."

"Yes, if it's due. You got your divorce at noon and married at 1 o'clock. There's alimony for one hour due you."

"I suppose it wouldn't look well for me to come to the funeral."

"Chauncey's funeral, so far as his first wife is concerned, occurred long ago."

"Of course I'd like to show my kindly sympathy for you. The neighbors might think it queer of me to be here, but it would show them that I'm not malicious."

"Oh, they know you haven't any grudge against me. Why should you have? It was I who made it easy for you. Chauncey was well enough satisfied with the desertion plan after he met me."

"H'm! They all know that I wouldn't stand him any longer."

"He told me he was afraid you would."

"I'd have just liked to hear him say that in the flesh."

There was a step in the back room—the room where Mrs. Cressler supposed the corpse was lying—a man's step, and who should walk into the room but Chauncey Chittenden.

"La's a mercy!" exclaimed Mrs. Cressler. "I thought you were dead!"

"That's the fellow in the other flat."

"What have you been doing to me for this way, Mary Chittenden?"

"I haven't been doing."

"And you, Chauncey Chittenden—I always thought you were alive—cavering."

"A corpse can't cavertain. I am only a corpse so far as you are concerned. I heard what you thought of me alive long ago. I'm glad to hear what you think of me dead."

Mrs. Cressler flounced out.

Do You Want to Know

What You Swallow?

There is a growing sentiment in this country in favor of medicines of known composition. It is but natural that one should know what he is taking, and the position of that which he or she is expected to swallow, whether it be food, drink or medicine.

Recognizing this growing disposition on the part of the public, and realizing that the fullest publicity can only add to the well-earned reputation of the standard medicine, Dr. R. V. Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y., has "taken time by the forelock," as it were, and is publishing a broadsheet of all the ingredients entering into his leading medicines, the "Golden Medical Discovery," the popular liver invigorator, stomach tonic, blood purifier, the best regulator; also of his "Favorite Prescription" for weak, over-worked, broken-down, nervous and invalid women.

This bold and out-spoken movement on the part of Dr. Pierce, has, by showing exactly what his well-known medicines are composed of, completely disarmed all harping critics who have heretofore unjustly attacked them. A little pamphlet has been compiled, from the standard medical authorities of all the several schools of practice, showing the strongest endorsements by leading medical writers of the several ingredients which enter into Dr. Pierce's medicines. A copy of this little book is mailed free to any one desiring to learn more concerning the medicinal ingredients which enter into the composition of Dr. Pierce's medicines. Address Dr. Pierce as above.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets are the most successful and reliable of all the standard medicine. They regulate and invigorate Stomach, Liver, and Bowels. Do not permit the "broadsheet" cure constipation. One or two each day for a laxative and regulator, three or four for active cathartics. Once tried and you will be a convert.
